

Roll the Dice: Collaboration

Customize the template on the following page for your students' needs. Review the samples on the third page for ideas.

Asking students to work in groups is one thing. Teaching them how and giving them the tools to collaborate effectively is quite another.

The template on the next page is one tool you can use to support students with true collaboration. With the template, each student takes responsibility for completing one specific task that contributes to an overall group goal. For example, if the goal is to track motifs throughout a text, each student may analyze one specific passage for the motif and then come together with the group to share their analysis of that passage.

Use this template so you don't have to "roll the dice," so to speak, with approaching group work in your classroom.

See below!

How to implement the Roll the Dice template in the classroom

Step 1: Determine a focus for the group's work/determine the group's goal (i.e. motif tracking, character foils).

Step 2: Customize the template on page 2 so that each box includes a specific task for each group member to complete. Locate a dice for each group.  ACTIVE LEARNING PRO-TIP If you are working with students who are experienced with collaboration, you could complete Steps 1 and 2 together, as a class.

Step 3: Group students and explain the template. Each group member will "roll the dice" (yes, they will actually roll the dice!) to determine which number box they will complete. If there are not exactly 6 group members in each group, some students may need to double up on how many boxes they complete.

Step 4: Allow students individual quiet time to investigate and compose an answer to the task in their box.

Step 5: Allow groups to come together to share their individual work. Consider creating a document to focus their work for this step.

Step 6: Invite groups to participate in a full class discussion or activity. For example, a Socratic seminar would be a great way for all students in the class to come together to discuss what they have investigated and interpreted!
